BRISBANE Girls Grammar students have become trailblazers in the youth drama scene after introducing the new play, The Chosen, to audiences for the first time.

Award-winning playwright Lachlan Philpott was commissioned by the school to create the play, which students performed last week.

But students can now expect to see other actors reclaim their roles as the play has been picked up for publishing by Playlab.

Mr Philpott said the collaboration had established an innovative and effective method for practising artists to work in a school.

"This play is fun, resonant and unique. It could not have been written without the amazing and generous partnership between the staff and students at the school," he said.

Playlab's Ian Lawson said the piece would be a great educational package for teachers and students.
