'Under the guidance of dedicated, conscientious and inspirational science teachers, Girls Grammar laid the ground work for my abiding interest in scientific research. Through the School's encouragement to gain a broad education, I was also able to study art, modern history, music and languages, which prepared me for pursuing a life of varied activities.

Importantly, the School always facilitated the full realisation of an individual's potential, as well as the preparation for leadership. BGGGS consistently displayed a concern to nurture in girls a sense of responsibility for self and the community.'
